ABSTRACT

Washington State's Temporary Advisory Council on Public Higher Education was established in 1965 to advise the legislature and the governor on the need for additional institutions to meet higher education demand. In this report, the council's history and actions are outlined and its recommendations are summarized for eight areas: establishment of a permanent council on higher education, planning and articulation with private colleges, studies of policies and new institution concepts, community college policy and planning, student financial aid programs, student drug use policy and studies, personnel and land management procedures, and the establishment of a metropolitan tract. The state senate's concurrent resolution creating the council, other documents relating to the council's operation, and two house and two senate resolutions in four major areas of council study are appended. December 16, 1968

The Honorable Daniel J. Evans
Governor of the State of Washington

Members of the Forty-first Legislature

The Fortieth Session of the Legislature recreated the Temporary Advisory Council on Public Higher Education to develop plans for the orderly growth of public higher education, and to cooperate with other public and private entities in determining public higher educational needs.

In order to define a plan for a process to ascertain the future higher educational demands, the Advisory Council retained the firm of Arthur D. Little, Inc., nationally known consultants. As a result of their study the Advisory Council is recommending the establishment of a Council on Higher Education to become a permanent higher educational planning and coordinating agency for the state. In addition, the Advisory Council is making recommendations on the relationship of public and private institutions of higher education, student financial aid programs, modifications to the Community College Act of 1967, and other issues which were directed to the Advisory Council.

The following report summarizes the Council's activities and provides background information on the policy positions contained therein.

The Advisory Council is indebted to the outstanding cooperation received from various legislative and executive agencies, and the public and independent institutions of higher education.

Respectfully submitted,

Gordon Sandison

INTRODUCTION

The Temporary Advisory Council on Public Higher Education was initially created during the Extraordinary Session of the 1965 Legislature in recognition of the need for an independent organ to advise the Legislature and the Governor on the issue of the necessity for an additional institution or institutions to meet the increasing demands for higher education within the State.

In order to carry out those directives assigned to it, the Advisory Council was given a membership unique among legislative and administrative councils. Included in its membership were five senators and five representatives selected by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, respectively, and equally divided between parties, the presidents of each of the state colleges and universities and the presidents of two of the public community colleges appointed by the Governor. Also included were seven public members appointed by the Governor and representing each congressional district in the State. The Governor included one independent college president among the appointed public members.

This tripartite composition allowed the Council to be truly representative of the major influencing forces involved in higher education today. Institutional participation provided expert advice for the legislative and public members in the development of higher educational policies and ensured implementation of the policies through such institutional involvement.

At the time of its creation the Advisory Council was directed to function in an advisory capacity to the Legislature, appropriate State officials and the governing boards of the institutions of public higher education. It was to develop plans for the orderly growth of public higher education in this State and to review the programs of the institutions of public higher education.

The Advisory Council, at the close of its first biennium, submitted four separate recommendations for action to the Legislature based on its several studies: first, the Council recommended that a new four-year state college should be authorized at the earliest possible date; second, that a new four-year state college should be located at a suburban site in Thurston County; third, creation of community college system, thus separating community college education from secondary education and incorporating it into the state's higher educational system; fourth, that the Legislature should extend the life of the Temporary Advisory Council on Public Higher Education until 1969.

The 1967 Legislature accepted the Council's recommendations listed above, the Legislature authorized the establishment of a new four-year state college, the first in seventy-five years, and located it just outside Olympia. Further, the Legislature did create a community college system which is part of higher education to provide for the dramatically increasing number of students requiring high standards of education either as a part of the continuing higher education program or for occupational training. Finally, the Legislature recreated the Advisory Council for another biennium.

The Council again was given the task of developing plans for the orderly growth of public higher education and of cooperating with other public and private entities in determining the higher educational needs of this state. Also, the Advisory Council was directed by Senate Concurrent Resolution 15 "to review the functions, facilities, programs, and financing of the various institutions of public higher education so that there will be an efficient use of resources and avoidance of unnecessary duplications; . . ."

Due to the success of the Advisory Council in providing solutions to the complex problems of planning for higher education, the Legislature in recreating it retained the tripartite membership previously discussed.

Upon the selection of an Executive Director for the State Board for Community College Education, an Ex-Officio position for him was created by the Advisory Council on its Subcommittees on Policies and Community Colleges in recognition of the necessity for representation from the community college system.

The Advisory Council divided its membership into the following four working groups in order to carry out the above listed directives. These were the Subcommittees on Policies, Management Procedures, Special Studies and Community Colleges. The Subcommittee on Policies formed two special committees, an Ad Hoc Committee on Student Drug Usage and a Task Force on Coordination.

Each of the Council's subcommittees contains a majority of Council members and possess such a division of members as to allow for a balanced representation of legislators, institutional and public members.

The Subcommittee on Policies, chaired by Senator Sandison, was responsible for reviewing the coordination of higher education within this state. This review has resulted in the proposal to create a Council on Higher Education (Chapter I). This Subcommittee also was responsible for conducting a study of the relationship of private to public higher education in providing for the total educational needs of the state. This study is found in Chapter II.

The Subcommittee on Community Colleges, chaired by Senator McCormack, was responsible for monitoring the progress of the State Board for Community College Education in its implementation of the Community College Act of 1967 (Chapter IV).

The Subcommittee on Management Procedures, chaired by Senator Ryder, fulfilled Senate Resolution 67 Ex. 60 by conducting a review of the management of the Metropolitan Tract (Chapter VIII). In accordance with a Council directive this subcommittee also has prepared papers on interinstitutional management procedures, personnel management, finance and systems, state aid to public higher education and management of state-owned lands (Chapter VII).

The Subcommittee on Special Studies, chaired by Representative Kirk, carried out the directives of House Concurrent Resolution 32 and prepared, in cooperation with the Legislative Budget Committee, a study on the feasibility and desirability of establishing a state program of student financial aid (Chapter V). This subcommittee reviewed the waiver of tuition and fees for foreign students attending state universities (included within the student financial aid chapter). It concluded a study of the necessity or desirability of a baccalaureate degree as a condition to certification as a Certified Public Accountant (Senate Resolution 67-Ex. 45, Chapter III).

Each of the eight chapters in this report recounts an Advisory Council study or collection of related studies. All of the chapters, except Chapter IV—Community Colleges, follow a specific outline. This begins with the purpose, followed by recommendations, background material, findings and conclusions. Legislative proposals where applicable to carry out Council policy determinations are included at the close of the related chapters.

Each chapter represents a condensation and summation of important data so as to keep the Advisory Council's report within manageable limits. The original studies and other accumulated data have been retained and are available upon request for official study purposes.

A summary of Advisory Council recommendations is included at the beginning of this report. This provides the reader with a "report in brief," allowing a review of the action prior to concentration on the details.
